Dear Friends,

What a remarkable year the first chapter in our life together has been. Very shortly the 2018/2019 season will come to a close, a season in which we have worked together to protect and reaffirm the unique identity of the Czech Philharmonic – a tradition of heartfelt musicality, expressed through an unmistakable sound quality. It is a quality that touches people and is admired everywhere that the Orchestra performs. The silence that fell as we ended the two performances of Mahler’s Second Symphony at Vienna’s Musikverein said it all. And, it is this that is our mission everywhere, as we go from Bratislava to Vienna, from London to New York: to convey the spirituality that is inherent in great music. Our orchestra relishes the privilege of being a cultural ambassador for the Czech Republic, and bringing the world closer to the country’s vast treasure trove of musical masterpieces.

And, this is exactly what we shall continue to do for the coming 2019/2020 season in our travels to the BBC Proms in London, to Taiwan and Japan; and at our residencies at Vienna’s Musikverein and Paris’ Philharmonie where we will bring The Tchaikovsky Project, a series of concerts and recordings that needed four years to realise and which Decca will release as a complete set of discs at the end of summer 2019.

But, before taking our music across the world, all our ideas begin in Prague where we have endeavoured to create a concert season which balances music that you both know and love with repertoire that may now be unfamiliar, but that we hope you will grow to love equally over the coming years. You will instantly recognise the works by Smetana, Dvorak, Janacek, Martinu, Brahms, Mahler, as well as Beethoven’s cycle of symphonies and concertos; at the same time we are looking forward to introducing you to Dutilleux, Glanert, Berio, Srnka, Teml, Eötvös, Reich. Whether already known or not, we believe in each of the composers’ creativity and are looking forward to sharing their music with you.

Fundamentally it is all about balancing the old and the new. The old that remains ever young when rediscovered, and the new that will hopefully never grow old.

Finally, I want to thank you our audience, for the warm and generous welcome that you have given me personally and for being there with us and for us. I very much look forward to the coming seasons.

Semyon Bychkov
Czech Philharmonic

“The Czech Philharmonic is among the very few orchestras that have managed to preserve a unique identity. In a music world that is increasingly globalized and uniform, the orchestra’s noble tradition has retained authenticity of expression and sound, making it one of the world’s artistic treasures. When the orchestra and Czech government asked me to succeed beloved Jiří Bělohlávek, I felt deeply honoured by the trust they were ready to place in me. There is no greater privilege for an artist than to become part of and lead an institution that shares the same values, the same commitment to become part of and lead an institution that shares the same values, the same commitment to the art of music.”

Semyon Bychkov,
Chief Conductor and Music Director

The Czech Philharmonic gave its first concert – an all Dvořák programme which included the world première of his Biblical Songs, Nos. 1–5 conducted by the composer himself – in the famed Rudolfinum Hall on 4 January 1896. Acknowledged for its definitive interpretations of Czech composers, whose music the Czech Philharmonic has championed since its formation, the orchestra is also recognised for the special relationship it has to the music of Brahms and Tchaikovsky – friends of Dvořák – and to Mahler, who gave the world première of his Symphony No. 7 with the orchestra in 1908.

The Czech Philharmonic’s extraordinary and proud history reflects both its location at the very heart of Europe and the Czech Republic’s turbulent political history, for which Smetana’s Má vlast (My Homeland) has become a potent symbol. The orchestra gave its first full rendition of Má vlast in a brewery in Smíchov in 1901; in 1925 under Chief Conductor Václav Talich, Má vlast was the orchestra’s first live broadcast and, four years later, the first work that the orchestra committed to disc. During the Nazi occupation, when Goebbels demanded that the orchestra perform in Berlin and Dresden, Talich programmed Má vlast as an act of defiance; while in 1945 Rafael Kubelík conducted the work as a ‘concert of thanks’ for the newly liberated Czechoslovakia. 45 years later, Má vlast was Kubelík’s choice to mark Czechoslovakia’s first free elections and, this year, Decca Classics released Jiří Bělohlávek’s recording of Má vlast made at the time of the 2014 Prague Spring Festival to mark the 100th anniversary of Czechoslovak independence.

The opening of the ‘Centenary Season’ was marked by Semyon Bychkov’s first concerts as the orchestra’s Chief Conductor and Music Director. Opening his tenure with a performance of Mahler’s Symphony No. 2 Resurrection, the following subscription concerts featured Berio’s Sinfonia and Dvořák’s Symphony No. 7. The celebrations continued with a single concert in London followed by an extensive 13-concert tour of the US and a week-long residency in Vienna. During the rest of the season, the orchestra and Semyon Bychkov also toured Germany and Belgium, gave another series of concerts in Prague, and completed the Tchaikovsky Project, a cycle of recordings for the Decca label.

Throughout the orchestra’s history, two features have remained at its core: its championing of Czech composers and its belief in music’s power to change lives. Defined from its inauguration as ‘an organisation for the enhancement of musical art in Prague, and a pension organisation for the members of the National Theatre Orchestra in Prague, its widows and orphans’, the proceeds from the four concerts that it performed each year helped to support members of the orchestra who could no longer play and the immediate family of deceased musicians.

As early as the 1920s, Václav Talich (Chief Conductor 1919–1941) pioneered concerts for workers, young people and other voluntary organisations including the Red Cross, the Czechoslovak Sokol and the Union of Slavic Women and, in 1923 gave three benefit concerts for Russian, Austrian and German players including members of the Vienna Philharmonic and Berlin Philharmonic Orchestras. Philosophos continues today, and is equally vibrant. In addition to a recently launched Orchestral Academy, a comprehensive education strategy engages with more than 400 schools bringing all ages to the Rudolfinum – some travelling as many as four hours – to hear concerts and participate in masterclasses. An inspirational music and song programme for the extensive Romany communities within the Czech Republic and Slovakia has helped many socially excluded families to find a voice.

An early champion of Martinů’s music, the orchestra premièred his Czech Rhapsody in 1919 and, its detailed inventory of Czech music, undertaken by Václav Talich included the world premières of Martinů’s Half Time (1924), Janáček’s Sinfonietta (1926) and the Prague première of Janáček’s Taras Bulba (1924). Rafael Kubelík was also an advocate of Martinů’s music and premièred Field Mass (1946) and Symphony No. 5 (1947), while Karel Ančerl conducted the première of Martinů’s Symphony No. 6 Fantaisies symphoniques (1956). Fantaisies symphoniques has also featured twice in the orchestra’s programmes at the BBC Proms, first in 1969 under Chief Conductor Václav Neumann and then in 2010 under Sir John Eliot Gardiner.

Prague has long attracted composers, and W. A. Mozart was one of them. After the great success of his opera The Marriage of Figaro here, he wrote Don Giovanni and La clemenza di Tito specifically for Prague. He conducted the premières of both operas himself in 1787 and 1791 at the Nostitz Theatre. Five years later, Beethoven made two trips to Prague returning again in 1798 to give the première of his Piano Concerto No. 1. His Seventh Symphony was composed in the spa town of Teplitz (now Teplitz). Mahler’s ties ran even deeper. Born in the Bohemian village of Kalistě, now part of the Czech Republic, he was 23 when he conducted the Royal Municipal Theatre in Moravia and first came to Prague to conduct the Neues Deutsches Theatre before giving the world première of his Symphony No. 7 with the Czech Philharmonic.

Mahler, however, was not the first non-Czech composer to conduct the Czech Philharmonic. Edward Grieg conducted... the orchestra in 1906; Stravinsky performed his Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra under Václav Talich in 1930; Leonard Bernstein conducted the European première of Aaron Copland’s Symphony No. 3 at the Prague Spring in 1947; Arthur Honegger conducted a concert of his own music in 1949; Darius Milhaud gave the première of his Music for Prague at the Prague Spring Festival in 1956; and, in 1996, Krzysztof Penderecki conducted the première of his Concerto for Clarinet and Chamber Orchestra. During the past seasons, the Czech Philharmonic has continued its tradition of inviting composer-conductors – in 2016 Peter Eötvös conducted his composition Speaking Drums at the Rudolfinum, and in 2018 Thomas Adès presented his Totentanz.

Their names are joined by the many luminaries who have collaborated with the orchestra over the years: Martha Argerich, Claudio Arrau, Evgeny Kissin, Erich Kleiber, Leonid Kogan, Erich Leinsdorf, Lovro von Matačić, Ivan Moravec, Yevgeny Mravinsky, David Oistrakh, Antonio Pedrotti, Sviatoslav Richter, Mstislav Rostropovich, Gennady Roszhdestvensky, Wolfgang Sawallisch, Wolfgang Schneiderhan, Georg Szell, Henryk Szeryng, Bruno Walter and Alexander Zemlinsky.

Chief Conductor and Music Director

“A new Chief Conductor and a new friendship: the Czech Philharmonic and Semyon Bychkov understand each other...”

On 3 October 2018, Semyon Bychkov started his tenure as Chief Conductor and Music Director of the Czech Philharmonic with a concert that celebrated 100 years of Czech Independence. Further celebratory concerts were given by Bychkov and the orchestra in Prague, London, New York, Washington and Vienna in the autumn. For the remainder of the 2018/2019 season, in addition to further performances in Prague, they embarked on a European tour to Germany and Belgium.

Born in St Petersburg in 1952, Bychkov emigrated to the United States in 1975 and has been based in Europe since the mid-1980’s. In common with the Czech Philharmonic, Bychkov has one foot firmly in the cultures both of the East and the West. Following his early concerts with the orchestra in 2013, Bychkov devised The Tchaikovsky Project, a series of concerts, residencies and studio recordings which allowed them the luxury of exploring Tchaikovsky’s music together, both in Prague’s Rudolfinum and abroad.

The first fruit of The Tchaikovsky Project – a recording of Symphony No. 6 coupled with the Romeo & Juliet Fantasy-Overture – was released by Decca in October 2016, and was followed in August 2017 by the release of the Manfred Symphony. The Tchaikovsky Project culminates in August 2019 with Decca’s release of all Tchaikovsky’s symphonies, the three piano concertos, Romeo & Juliet, Serenade for Strings and Francesca da Rimini, followed by residencies in Vienna, Paris and Tokyo in the autumn.

Semyon Bychkov won the Rachmaninoff Conducting Competition when he was 20 years old. Two years later, having been denied his prize of conducting the Leningrad Philharmonic Orchestra, he left the former Soviet Union where, from the age of five he was singled out for an extraordinarily privileged musical education. Starting with piano, Bychkov was later selected to study at the Glinka Choir School where he received his first conducting lesson aged 13. Four years later he was accepted at the Leningrad Conservatory as a student of the legendary Ilya Musin.

By the time Bychkov returned to St Petersburg in 1989 as the Philharmonic’s Principal Guest Conductor, he had enjoyed success in the US as Music Director of the Grand Rapids Symphony Orchestra and the Buffalo Philharmonic. His international career, which began in France with Opéra de Lyon and at the Aix-en-Provence Festival, took off with a series of high-profile cancellations which resulted in invitations to conduct the New York Philharmonic, Berlin Philharmonic and Royal Concertgebouw Orchestras. In 1989, he was named Music Director of the Orchestre de Paris; in 1997, Chief Conductor of the WDR Symphony Orchestra Cologne; and the following year, Chief Conductor of the Dresden Semperoper.
Bychkov’s symphonic and operatic repertoire is wide-ranging. He conducts in all the major houses including La Scala, Opéra national de Paris, Dresden Semperoper, Wiener Staatsoper, New York’s Metropolitan Opera, the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden and Teatro Real, Madrid. While Principal Guest Conductor of Maggio Musicale Fiorentino, his productions of Janáček’s Jenůfa, Schubert’s Fierrabras, Puccini’s La bohème, Shostakovich’s Lady Macbeth of Mtsensk and Mussorgsky’s Boris Godunov each won the prestigious Premio Abbiati. In 2018, he conducted Wagner’s Parsifal both at the Wiener Staatsoper and Bayreuth. Other new productions in Vienna include Strauss’ Der Rosenkavalier and Daphne, Wagner’s Lohengrin and Mussorgsky’s Khovanshchina; while in London, he made his debut with a new production of Strauss’ Elektra, and subsequently conducted new productions of Mozart’s Così fan tutte, Strauss’ Die Frau ohne Schatten and Wagner’s Tannhäuser.

On the concert platform, the combination of innate musicality and rigorous Russian pedagogy has ensured that Bychkov’s performances are highly anticipated. In the UK, in addition to regular performances with the London Symphony Orchestra, his honorary titles at the Royal Academy of Music and the BBC Symphony Orchestra – with whom he appears annually at the BBC Proms – reflect the warmth of the relationships. In Europe, he tours frequently with the Royal Concertgebouw Orchestra, the Vienna Philharmonic and Munich Philharmonic, as well as being an annual guest of the Berlin Philharmonic, the Leipzig Gewandhaus, the Orchestre National de France and the Accademia Nazionale di Santa Cecilia; in the US, he can be heard with the New York Philharmonic, Chicago Symphony, Los Angeles Symphony, Philadelphia and Cleveland Orchestras. In 2019/2020, in addition to his commitments to the Czech Philharmonic in Prague, Moscow and Nanking, in residence in Paris and Vienna, as well as on tour in Taiwan and Japan, Bychkov will conduct the Munich Philharmonic and the Royal Concertgebouw. He will conduct Parsifal at Bayreuth, Elektra at the Vienna Staatsoper and Tristan and Isolde at the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden.

Recognised for his interpretations of the core repertoire, Bychkov has worked closely with many contemporary composers including Luciano Berio, Henri Dutilleux and Maurizio Kagel. In recent seasons he has worked closely with René Staar, Thomas Larcher, Richard Dubignon, Detlev Glanert and Julian Anderson, conducting premières of their works with the Vienna Philharmonic, New York Philharmonic, Royal Concertgebouw and the BBC Symphony Orchestra at the BBC Proms.

Bychkov’s recording career began in 1986 when he signed with Philips and began a significant collaboration which produced an extensive discography with the Berlin Philharmonic, Bavarian Radio, Royal Concertgebouw, Philharmonia, London Philharmonic and Orchestre de Paris. Subsequently a series of benchmark recordings – the result of his 13-year collaboration (1997–2010) with WDR Symphony Orchestra Cologne – include a complete cycle of Brahms Symphonies, and works by Strauss (Elektra, Daphne, Ein Heldenleben, Metamorphosen, Alpensinfonie, Till Eulenspiegel), Mahler (Symphony No. 3, Das Lied von der Erde), Shostakovich (Symphonies Nos. 4, 7, 8, 10, 11), Rachmaninoff (The Bells, Symphonic Dances, Symphony No. 2), Verdi (Requiem), Detlev Glanert and York Höller. His recording of Wagner’s Lohengrin was voted BBC Music Magazine’s Disc of the Year in 2010; his recording of César Franck’s Symphony in D minor was the Recommended Recording of BBC Radio 3’s Record Review’s Building a Library; and his recent recording of Schmidt’s Symphony No. 2 with the Vienna Philharmonic was selected as BBC Music Magazine’s Record of the Month.

Semyon Bychkov was named 2015’s Conductor of the Year by the International Opera Awards.
Born in the Czech Republic, Jakub Hrůša is chief conductor of the Bamberg Symphony, and principal guest conductor of the Philharmonia Orchestra. He is a frequent guest with many of the world’s greatest orchestras, and in addition to his titled positions, he enjoys close relationships with the Royal Concertgebouw Orchestra, the Orchestra dell’Accademia Nazionale di Santa Cecilia, the Leipzig Gewandhaus Orchestra, the Mahler Chamber Orchestra, the Deutsches Symphonie-Orchester Berlin, the Rundfunk-Sinfonieorchester Berlin, L’Orchestre Philharmonique de Radio France, the Cleveland Orchestra, the New York Philharmonic, the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, and the Tokyo Metropolitan Symphony Orchestra. In the 2018/2019 season he made his debuts with the Berlin Philharmonic, the Bavarian Radio Symphony, L’Orchestre de Paris, and the NHK Symphony.

His relationships with leading vocal and instrumental soloists have included collaborations in recent seasons with Behzod Abduraimov, Piotr Anderszewski, Leif Ove Andsnes, Lisa Batiashvili, Yefim Bronfman, Rudolf Buchbinder, Isabelle Faust, Bernarda Fink, Julia Fischer, Sol Gabetta, Hilary Hahn, Janine Jansen, Karita Mattila, Leonidas Kavakos, Sergey Khachatryan, Lang Lang, Jan Lisiecki, Viktoria Mullova, Anne Sofie Mutter, Josef Špaček, Jean-Yves Thibaudet, Daniil Trifonov, Simon Trpčeski, Mitsuko Uchida, Klaus Florian Vogt, Yuja Wang, Frank Peter Zimmermann or Nikolaj Znaider.

As an opera conductor, he has been a regular guest at the Glyndebourne Festival, conducting Vanessa, The Cunning Little Vixen, A Midsummer Night’s Dream, Carmen, The Turn of the Screw, Don Giovanni, and La bohème. He has also served as music director of Glyndebourne on Tour for three years. Elsewhere he has led productions for the Royal Opera House in Covent Garden (Carmen), the Vienna State Opera (a new production of The Makropulos Case), L’Opéra National de Paris (Rusalka and The Merry Widow), and the Frankfurt Opera (Il trittico), among others.

As a recording artist, his most recent releases are Smetana’s Má vlast with the Bamberg Symphony (Tudor) and the Concertos for Orchestra by Bartók and Kodály with the RSB Berlin (Pentatone). He has also recorded Berlioz’s Symphonie fantastique, Strauss’s Eine Alpensinfonie, and Suk’s Asrael Symphony with the Tokyo Metropolitan Symphony Orchestra (Octavia Records); the Tchaikovsky and Bruch violin concertos with Nicola Benedetti and the Czech Philharmonic (Universal).

Jakub Hrůša studied conducting at the Academy of Performing Arts in Prague, where his teachers included Jiří Bělohlávek. He is currently the president of the International Martinů Circle and of the Dvořák Society, and in 2015 he was the inaugural recipient of the Sir Charles Mackerras Prize.
Tomáš Netopil took up the position of general music director at the Aalto Theatre and the Philharmonie Essen at the start of 2013/2014. In addition to his concert season at the helm of the Essen Philharmoniker, his opera productions in 2018/2019 include operas, such as Der Freischütz, Salome, Così fan tutte, and Rusalka. In 2017/2018 he conducted The Bartered Bride, Salome, Lohengrin, Die Walküre, and Die Entführung aus dem Serail.

Netopil made his debut with Sächsische Staatsoper Dresden in 2008. Since then he has conducted La clemenza di Tito, Rusalka, The Cunning Little Vixen, La Juive, and Busoni’s Doktor Faustus. He will conduct a new production of The Bartered Bride there in the spring of 2019. This season, he will also conduct a new production of Jenůfa for the Netherlands Opera, and he returns to the Wiener Staatsoper for Idomeneo.

An inspirational force in Czech music, Tomáš Netopil is one of the two principal guest conductors of the Czech Philharmonic. In August 2017 he conducted two Dvořák and Mozart concerts alongside Diana Damrau at the Grafenegg Festival. In early spring 2018 he led the orchestra on an extensive UK tour and conducted Má vlast in the opening concert of the 2018 Prague Spring Festival, which was televised live.

About his debut at the Dvořák Prague Festival in 2017 with the Essener Philharmoniker, the online magazine Bachtrack wrote: “The music lit up the stage like a rousing march, providing a dazzling showcase for Netopil’s facility for creating three-dimensional soundscapes with the orchestra. With Strauss, they showed an impressive ability to segue almost instantly from dramatic dissonance to charming melodies.” He then conducted Dvořák’s Te Deum at the closing concert of the festival with the Vienna Symphony Orchestra, which he subsequently conducted at the Vienna Konzerthaus and later at the Vienna Musikverein.

His 2018/2019 concert appearances include a return to the Zürich Tonhalle. Highlights of recent seasons include appearances with L’Orchestre de Paris, the London Philharmonic Orchestra, the Netherlands Radio Philharmonic at Amsterdam’s Concertgebouw, and L’Orchestre Philharmonique de Monte Carlo. Future dates include the Leipzig Gewandhaus and the RAI Torino.

Tomáš Netopil’s discography for Supraphon includes Janáček’s Glagolitic Mass, Dvořák’s complete cello works, Martinů’s Ariane and Double Concerto, and Smetana’s Má vlast with the Prague Symphony Orchestra. He has also recorded Suk’s Asrael Symphony with the Essener Philharmoniker.

From 2008–2012 Tomáš Netopil held the position of music director of the Prague National Theatre. Tomáš Netopil studied violin and conducting in his native Czech Republic as well as at the Royal College of Music in Stockholm under the guidance of Professor Jorma Panula. In 2002 he won the first Sir Georg Solti Conductors Competition at the Alte Oper Frankfurt.

Subscription Series A offers a highly varied selection of concerts in terms of the choice of composers, the combination of Czech and foreign music, and the introduction of five conductors and a large number of soloists. The series lets listeners experience two major works for voice and orchestra with Janáček’s Glagolitic Mass at the beginning, then before the end a relatively new work: Glanert’s Requiem for Hieronymus Bosch. There will be an interesting combination of a Berio work inspired by Schubert and Beethoven’s Seventh Symphony. More Beethoven will be heard together with a suite by Gluck. A carefully planned programme offers an interesting combination of the music of Suk, Bartók, Haas, and Janáček, and the evening with Brahms and Bruckner will be no less special. Semyon Bychkov, Jakub Hrůša, Petr Altrichter, and Giovanni Antonini are names that guarantee that Prague will enjoy great musical experiences. Another artist making his debut with the Czech Philharmonic is the Spanish conductor Pablo Heras-Casado. Joining the vocal soloists are Jan Mráček, a Concert Master of the Czech Philharmonic, and two pianists: Francesco Piemontesi and Piotr Anderszewski.
The Czech Philharmonic invites its subscribers and others to attend regular gatherings before the concerts of subscription series A, B, and C. These forums and lectures prepare audience members, set the mood, and lure visitors to an evening with the Czech Philharmonic. Conductors, soloists, or musicians of the Czech Philharmonic as well as musicologists or music journalists discuss the composers and works on the programme and interesting circumstances and curiosities. Preludes include the playing of examples from audio or audiovisual recordings. The Czech Philharmonic offers these Preludes as a free bonus with its evening concerts. They always take place at 6:30 p.m. (or at 2 p.m. on Saturdays) in the Suk Hall unless stated otherwise.

Eva Hazdrová-Kopecká, Pavel Ryjáček, or Petr Kadlec lead the discussion.

The subscription concerts of series A are held on Wednesdays, Thursdays, and Fridays at 7:30 p.m. in the Dvořák Hall.

The prices of single tickets range from CZK 250 to 1,200.
Subscription prices range from CZK 1,400 to 4,400.

Individual tickets and subscriptions are sold at the Czech Philharmonic ticket office in the Rudolfinum and on-line at czechphilharmonic.cz. Reservations and information are available through Czech Philharmonic Customer Service.

“The rain in Luhačovice is pouring, just pouring. I look out of the window at the gloomy mountain Komoň. The clouds come pouring in, and the wind tears and scatters them. The darkness becomes denser and denser. Now I look out into the black of night; lightning slashes into the darkness. I switch on the flickering electric light on the high ceiling.” This is how Leoš Janáček described the atmosphere on that Autumn evening of 1916 when he began writing his Glagolitic Mass. He also described the new work to readers of the newspaper Lidové noviny shortly before the premiere:

“I sketch nothing more than a quiet motif of a desperate thought to the words Gospodi pomiluj [Lord, have mercy]. Nothing more than the joyous cries of Slava, Slava [Glory]! Nothing more than the heart-rending sorrow of the motif Rozpet že za ny, mučen i pogreben jest [He was also crucified for us; he suffered and was buried]! Nothing more than the firmness of faith and the affirmation of the motif Věruju [I believe]! And all of the excitement and commotion of the emotional ending with the motifs Amen, amen! And the reverent devotion of the motifs Svät, svät [Holy, Holy]! Blagoslovjen [Blessed is He], and agneče božij [Lamb of God]!”

Just two years earlier, Joseph Szigeti played Prokofiev’s First Violin Concerto in Prague after its rather lukewarm reception at the premiere in Paris. The jaded French public wanted to be shocked in those days, and Prokofiev’s concerto seemed too romantic to them. Today, this concerto and the Glagolitic Mass are regarded as gems of twentieth-century music. You will also hear a violin solo in Janáček’s musical setting of a poem by Svatopluk Čech about a dead fiddler returning to earth. The entire opening concert of Series A will captivate you with stirring music performed by marvellous Czech artists.

There is little that we have anticipated as eagerly as the Rudolfinum debut of Pablo Heras-Casado. Just the list of orchestras with which Pablo Heras-Casado appears would be plenty to recommend attending his concert: the Berlin Philharmonic, Vienna Philharmonic, London Symphony Orchestra, Chicago Symphony Orchestra, Los Angeles Philharmonic, Munich Philharmonic, Bavarian Radio Symphony Orchestra, Mariinsky Theatre, Israel Philharmonic, Orchestre de Paris, and many more. Pablo Heras-Casado is a Spanish patriot and the chief guest conductor at the Teatro Real in Madrid, where he is performing Wagner’s complete cycle Der Ring des Nibelungen. Maestro Casado records for the Deutsche Grammophon, Decca, Sony, and Harmonia Mundi labels, and although he is just 41 years old, he has been decorated for his musical artistry by both the Spanish and the French governments.

Like Pablo Heras-Casado, the Swiss pianist Francesco Piemontesi also returns to his homeland to share his artistry. In Ascona, near his native Locarno, he directs the festival Settimane Musicali, and he divides his time equally between activities as a soloist, chamber musician, and recording artist. At the beginning of his career, he recorded the Dvořák and Schumann concertos with Jiří Bělohlávek and the BBC Symphony Orchestra. At the Rudolfinum, he made his debut two years ago in Beethoven’s Third Piano Concerto and with a solo recital, and the success of both appearances immediately led us to invite him back for the 2019/2020 season.

Luciano Berio was often asked to “do something” with Schubert. He consistently refused until he got his hands on the sketches of Schubert's Tenth Symphony, written during the last weeks of the composer's life. Berio wished to avoid a musicological approach, by which one could do much harm in a cavalier attempt to complete the symphony, "as if one were Schubert or even Beethoven". Instead, Berio tries to bring old colours back to life, as if restoring Giotto's frescoes in Assisi without disguising the effects of time or filling in the blank spaces. His instrumentation of Schubert's sketches is in the spirit of the Unfinished Symphony, resorting to the orchestration methods of Mendelssohn only when the music demands it. He fills in the spaces between the individual sketches with music in his own musical language woven from reminiscences of Schubert's late works, gentle polyphony, and echoes of the music that precedes and follows. Berio tiptoes quietly around Schubert, and every transition between sketches is announced by the celesta.

The result is an enchanting symphony full of music that is pure Schubert that sparkles like a precious gem that has been gently, masterfully illuminated by Luciano Berio.

Although it might not seem so at first glance, this entire programme put together by Jakub Hrůša will be somewhat in the spirit of Janáček. Of any work in the worldwide literature, Béla Bartók's Third Piano Concerto is the closest to Janáček in terms of its mood and folk inspiration. And if one did not to know that the composer of the Scherzo Triste was Janáček's pupil Pavel Haas, one might reasonably attribute it to Janáček himself. The colours of this beautiful, original music seem to be an outgrowth of Janáček's opera The Cunning Little Vixen, and the violin solo at the end foreshadows the next work on the programme, Taras Bulba. Suk's Fantastic Scherzo naturally follows in the compositional traditions of Dvořák, which Janáček also built upon, and we clearly find something like this in the Lachian Dances as well. It is as if all four works were somehow connected, yet each presents its composer’s mastery in an original way.

Just as Leoš Janáček is an original figure who is difficult to categorise among the world’s composers, Piotr Anderszewski is an absolutely unique phenomenon on today’s piano scene. This introverted star, a virtuoso but not a showman, carefully chooses his repertoire and musical collaborators. He appears regularly with Jakub Hrůša. Anderszewski has earned international awards for his recordings of Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Schumann, and Szymanowski, and his Polish-Hungarian roots have naturally led him to perform the music of Béla Bartók.

The German composer Detlev Glanert is one of today’s most successful opera composers. Last season, the Czech Philharmonic performed his composition Weites Land. This season brings the Czech premiere of the full concert-length oratorio Requiem for Hieronymous Bosch. The Requiem was composed on a commission from Amsterdam’s Concertgebouw Orchestra for the 500th anniversary of the death of the famed Dutch painter. In it, Glanert unabashedly employs his vast operatic experience, and this can be heard both in the work’s sonic conception and in its dramatic structure. He combines the texts of the Catholic Mass for the Dead with the medieval collection of songs Carmina Burana, from which he has chosen a description of the seven deadly sins. We are witnesses to a spiritual trial, at which the Archangel Michael examines Bosch’s life through the prism of these seven sins. In eighteen sections, Bosch must face God’s judgement with the narrator as the chief prosecutor. A small choir sings the liturgical text of the Requiem, and a large choir with four soloists combines that text with a description of the sins.

Andrew Clements, a critic for the British newspaper The Guardian, has called Glanert’s Requiem “an outstanding choral achievement, a work of great power and intensely vivid invention, which uncannily finds musical parallels to Bosch’s surreal imagination, and to the extremes of his visions of heaven and hell, grandeur and intimacy. The score juxtaposes glimpses of the apocalypse with moments of extreme sweetness, in intensely detailed choral and orchestral writing that consistently avoids all the clichés that disfigure so many contemporary oratorios.”

While Count Carl von Oppersdorff was visiting his friend Prince Lichnowsky, he heard Ludwig van Beethoven’s Second Symphony, and he was so enthusiastic that he immediately offered the composer a large sum of music to compose another symphony for him. But while Beethoven’s music thrilled Count von Oppersdorff, the critics in Vienna could not stand it. According to the “Newspaper for the Elegant World”, the Second Symphony made the impression of “a hideously writhing, wounded dragon that refuses to die, but is writhing in its last agonies and, in the fourth movement, bleeds to death.” Beethoven further strengthened the effect of this terrible, devilish music by excluding the elegant minuet and by putting a thorny scherzo in its place. As it turns out, scherzos would become a fixed feature of symphonic form, displacing the unfortunate minuet for good. The Eighth Symphony is one of Beethoven’s few compositions that does not bear any dedication. Beethoven called it “my Little Symphony in F Major” to differentiate it from the Pastoral Symphony.

Although its premiere was not as successful as that of the Seventh Symphony that preceded it, the composer held it in very high regard musically.

The ballet Don Juan by Christoph Willibald Gluck also tells a very exciting story. Its importance to the ballet genre is similar to the importance of the revolutionary work Orfeo ed Euridice to opera. Don Juan is actually the first ballet to present the entire narrative of a story. Gluck had a very good grasp of dance, and he understood it as an art form all its own, entirely independent of music. The task of the dancer was to combine the musical and dancing elements into a single effective whole. There could be no better subject matter for this “prototype” than the drama of Don Juan.
Series B consists of “balancing”. Some of the concerts set out daringly into the music of the 20th and 21st centuries, while others fall back on the true classics of the repertoire. In this country, this primarily means Smetana’s Má vlast (My Homeland), which Semyon Bychkov will actually be conducting in Prague for the first time. Another concert of classics will be Tomáš Netopil’s programme with two works by Beethoven and a suite by Rameau. Contemporary counterparts comprise a performance by maestro Bychkov of Dutilleux’s Second Symphony and especially a concert under the baton of Peter Eötvös with works by Miroslav Srnka and by Eötvös himself. Among the classics of the 20th century are Martinů and Stravinsky of course, but the series climaxes with Janáček’s opera Káťa Kabanová which will be heard in a concert performance at the very end of the season. Besides operatic soloists, we can also look forward to the pianists Katia and Marielle Labèque, Rudolf Buchbinder, and Ivo Kahánek, the violinist Lisa Batiashvili, the cellist Gautier Capuçon, and the trumpet player Tamás Pálfalvi.
Czech Philharmonic invites its subscribers and others to attend regular gatherings before the concerts of subscription series A, B, and C. These forums and lectures prepare audience members, set the mood, and lure visitors to an evening with the Czech Philharmonic. Má vlast (My Homeland), a cycle of symphonic poems

Semyon Bychkov conductor

Smetana’s Má vlast (My Homeland) is more closely associated with the history of the Czech Philharmonic than perhaps any other work except for the New World Symphony. On the first radio broadcast of a concert in this country on 11 May 1925, the Czech Philharmonic played Má vlast. Four years later, the work was chosen for the orchestra’s first phonograph recording with Václav Talich for the His Master’s Voice label. During the Second World War, Talich conducted the entire work including the banned movements Tábor and Blaník on the programme of the concerts of the Czech Philharmonic in Berlin and Dresden, and by doing so he got the ban lifted in Prague as well. The legendary recording of the concert at the National Theatre in 1939, at the end of which the public spontaneously sang the national anthem, was released by Supraphon eight years ago. The Czech Philharmonic played Má vlast at the time of the Velvet Revolution, and upon the return of Rafael Kubelík from exile the orchestra opened the Prague Spring festival with the work in 1990 and played it in June of that year on Old Town Square. Má vlast has to be a part of the core repertoire of every chief conductor of the Czech Philharmonic, and for foreign artists, performing it at the Rudolfinum is always a special experience. Semyon Bychkov has been preparing himself diligently for these subscription concerts since last year, and he has already performed Má vlast with orchestras in Munich, Cologne, Hamburg, Madrid, Amsterdam, and Cleveland.

Peter Eötvös named his composition Jet Stream after the natural phenomenon. In it, the solo trumpet is not the lead voice like in a classical concerto, but rather, as the composer puts it, the “eye of the storm”, to which all of the musical flow refers. At just twenty-five years of age, the soloist Tamás Pálfalvi is not only a world-class soloist and the holder of numerous awards for his recordings and solo performances; above all, he is a visionary musician elevating the art of trumpet playing to entirely new dimensions.

Stravinsky’s Symphony in Three Movements is one of the major works of the twentieth century. Thirty years after The Rite of Spring, Stravinsky again made intensive use of the rhythmic element, which firmly holds the whole symphony together. In the first movement, the most prominent instrument is piano, which gives way to harp in the Andante, which is freely inspired by Werfel’s novel The Song of Bernadette.

The unrelenting rhythm is based on film footage of the Second World War, which deeply disturbed Stravinsky when he saw it.

Framing the programme are two orchestral pieces by the successful Czech composer Miroslav Srnka. He wrote move 01 for the Bavarian Radio Symphony Orchestra as a study for the opera South Pole, which he composed afterwards and which explores movement and the “temperature” of sound. He composed move 03 for the festival Printemps des Arts in Monte Carlo. This orchestral work has an original structure and form, and it won the 2018 “Coup de Coeur” in France.

This entire programme could be given the title "Double". You will be hearing a unique collection of three different works that share the theme of musical pairs in different forms and treatments. While Martinů composed his Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano, and Timpani in 1938 during the tense period preceding the Munich Agreement, the Concerto for Two Pianos, on the other hand, is jubilant and brilliant. In it, the shadow of approaching war is replaced by joy over success in America and the desire to create a virtuosic, radiant concert in which the pianos are not a part of the orchestra, but prominent solo voices.

In view of the length of the compositions and the work required to reset the stage, we have decided to divide the programme into three sections with two intervals.

Besides musical themes, the programmed works also all have in common Semyon Bychkov’s personal ties with them: the Double Concerto was the first Czech work that he performed as the new chief conductor of the Czech Philharmonic.

He often performs the Concerto for Two Pianos with his wife Marielle Labèque and her sister Katia, and he has consulted personally with Henri Dutilleux on that composer's Second Symphony ("Le Double") and has recorded it on CD.

The word Double in the title of Dutilleux's symphony refers to the standing of a group of twelve musicians in opposition to the whole orchestra, allowing the composer all kinds of combinations in dialogue or contrast and the use of polyrhythms and polytonality.

Tomáš Netopil divides his time between symphonic and opera conducting, and he wishes to show his “operatic face” to the Czech Philharmonic audience. For the players of the orchestra, the suite from the High Baroque opera Hippolyte et Aricie represents an interpretive challenge. Just as it is a good idea for early music ensembles to take an occasional excursion into the world of Romanticism, Baroque music also belongs on the programmes of modern orchestras, and the opera Hippolyte et Aricie is one of the supreme works of its genre. Jean-Philippe Rameau wrote it at the age of fifty-one as a respected music theorist and teacher. The new work caused a true sensation, and according to the critics, it contained “enough music to compose ten operas”.

Beethoven’s Fourth Symphony and First Piano Concerto have in common his attempt to come to terms with the compositional style of Haydn and Mozart in a worthy manner. Beethoven managed not only to grasp the greatness of the two composers, but also to channel his own original, sometimes unbridled musical language into the classical form. This can be best heard in the Menuetto of the Fourth Symphony, a full-fledged, brilliant scherzo notwithstanding its measured proportions.

The Fourth Symphony is Tomáš Netopil’s contribution to the complete performances of Beethoven’s symphonies for the composer’s 250th birthday. In February, the phenomenal Austrian pianist Rudolf Buchbinder will also begin a cycle of all five of Beethoven’s piano concertos, which he will be performing as a soloist with the Czech Philharmonic, and next season as a conductor as well.

The pairing of Lisa Batiashvili and Gautier Capuçon in Brahms’s Double Concerto is a dream come true for both musicians and audiences. Seldom do two of the world’s very greatest artists join forces rather than playing solo concertos, instead playing a work together that demands the same degree of instrumental virtuosity along with the experience of chamber music players. Moreover, Lisa Batiashvili and Gautier Capuçon have played Brahms’s Double Concerto together many times, and their appearance at the Rudolfinum with the Czech Philharmonic will be recorded and released by the DECCA label.

Brahms dedicated his Double Concerto to his friend, the violinist Joseph Joachim, as a sign of the renewal of their lifelong friendship, which had been disrupted by Joachim’s divorce when Brahms took sides with Joachim’s wife Amalie. For the concerto’s dedication, Brahms wrote the sentence: “To him, for whom it was written”. So that there could be no doubt about who was meant, he used the musical motif A-E-F, a permutation of the anagram of Joachim’s personal motto F-A-E: Frei aber einsam – Free but Lonesome.

During the coming seasons, we want our subscription series to offer not only symphonic works, but also concert performances of major operatic works on a regular basis. Káťa Kabanová follows upon the performance of Jenůfa under Jiří Bělohlávek in 2016, and as was the case back then, the Czech Philharmonic will follow its Prague concerts of the opera with performances abroad, this time at the Elbe Philharmonic Hall in Hamburg. The adapting of the performing of operas to the conditions of a symphony orchestra requires careful planning. Good operatic performances cannot be achieved following a usual weekly rehearsal schedule, and to perform at their best, singers need time between concerts for their voices to recuperate. For this reason, we scheduled the Thursday subscription concert a week earlier than the Wednesday and Friday performances. We hope that you appreciate the artistic necessity of this step and that the richness of the musical experience will compensate for any difficulties with planning your visit to the Rudolfinum.

In Káťa Kabanová, Janáček's deeply moving lyrical adaptation of Ostrovsky's drama The Storm, the finest Czech artists will join forces under the baton of Jakub Hrůša, an experienced and popular opera conductor. The drama of the ill-fated love of the married woman Katya for Boris leads inevitably to a tragic end with the contribution of society's prejudices and of male weakness. Káťa Kabanová, one of Janáček's most successful operas, is played regularly at leading opera houses worldwide.
Taking the baton will be a violinist, two prominent American musicians, and the orchestra’s chief conductor – thus, the conductors will be the defining characteristic of Series C. There is definitely plenty to look forward to. Besides having a career as a violin soloist, Leonidas Kavakos also conducts, and when the repertoire permits, he does both at once. In this regard, the Beethoven Violin Concerto will surely be a great experience. Beethoven will be performed again, but in a combination with Bartók and Reich presented to the Prague public by the well-known conductor David Robertson. James Gaffigan, who is returning to the Czech Philharmonic after a six-year absence, will give the world premiere of a work commissioned from Jiří Teml together with the music of Mozart and Shostakovich. Finally, there will be more Beethoven, this time in combination with Mahler under the baton of Semyon Bychkov. The list of soloists can only be described as rich, varied and balanced: the violinists Leonidas Kavakos and Josef Špaček, the violinist Antoine Tamesitt, the pianist Rudolf Buchbinder, and the soprano Chen Reiss.
The subscription concerts of series C are held on Thursdays and Fridays at 7:30 p.m. and on Saturdays at 3 p.m. in the Dvořák Hall.

Subscription prices range from CZK 800 to 2,900

Less than two weeks before the arrival of the year 2020, we are beginning a cycle in celebration of the 250th anniversary of the birth of Ludwig van Beethoven. One could hardly imagine a more powerful beginning than a performance of his Violin Concerto and Third Symphony. Leonidas Kavakos, who opened our 122nd season in exciting fashion, is returning as a violinist and a conductor. Last year, he recorded Beethoven's Violin Concerto with the Bavarian Radio Symphony Orchestra, which he conducted himself. The programmes of the concerts in Munich were similar to the Prague performance, except that on the second half, Leonidas Kavakos conducted the Seventh Symphony, while he will be conducting the Eroica at the Rudolfinum. Unlike competitions between performers, rankings of the popularity of compositions are not usual in the classical music world. An exception was a survey by the BBC Music Magazine in 2018, for which most of the respondents were conductors. And can you guess which symphony won? The Eroica defeated Beethoven's Ninth, which was second, and Mozart’s Jupiter Symphony, which finished in third place!

The Czech public is familiar with Kavakos as an exceptional violinist, but not as a conductor, but he has already led performances with the London Symphony Orchestra, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the New York Philharmonic, the Budapest Festival Orchestra, and the Vienna Symphony Orchestra, just to name a few. For his recording of Beethoven's violin sonatas, Leonidas Kavakos won the ECHO Klassik award, and in 2014 the magazine Gramophone named him "Artist of the Year".

Ludwig van Beethoven
Symphony No. 1 in C Major, Op. 21

The second subscription concert of Series C brings together Ludwig van Beethoven, who enchanted the nobility of Vienna with his talent as a young composer, and Béla Bartók, whose Viola Concerto was one of the final works composed at the end of his life. Baron Gottfried van Swieten was the patron behind Beethoven’s First Symphony, while Bartók wrote his concerto at the request of a performer, the Scottish violist William Primrose. In his fresh, energetic symphony, Beethoven proudly paid tribute to his teacher Joseph Haydn, who was his equal in terms of the quantity and originality of his musical ideas. In his Viola Concerto, Bartók could build upon a lifetime of compositional mastery, but he was unable to finish the work. He was in the last stages of his battle with leukaemia, but he still wrote to William Primrose that the concerto was nearly finished. Bartók’s friend Tibor Serly put the finishing touches on the concerto, and the composer’s son and the American violist Paul Neubauer made later revisions.

The concert will open with Music for Ensemble and Orchestra by Steve Reich, which was commissioned by the Los Angeles Philharmonic. The conductor of the premiere was Susanna Mälkki. Reich works with an extended form of the Baroque concerto grosso, in which there are twenty solo instruments including vibraphone and two pianos. The tempo of the five-movement composition remains constant, while there are changing note values in the pulsating parts for the two pianos. Thematically, the work is based on Reich’s earlier composition Runner.

This programme is framed by two of the major works in the history of music. Mozart’s Jupiter Symphony is the composer’s last and longest symphony. Among musicians it is so beloved that conductors voted it the third most popular of all symphonies. The Jupiter Symphony is the last of three great symphonies that Mozart composed in rapid succession in June and July 1788. The speed with which he composed the works and their formal interconnections led Nikolaus Harnoncourt to believe that Mozart had conceived them as a single whole. This hypothesis is supported by, among other things, the facts that the first movement of the Jupiter Symphony lacks the usual slow introduction and that its finale is unusually lengthy.

Dmitri Shostakovich’s First Violin Concerto fell victim to Zhdanov’s censorship, so the composer withheld it, and it was not premiered until seven years later. Meanwhile Shostakovich continued working on the concerto with David Oistrakh, its dedicatee. The premiere with the Leningrad Philharmonic and Yevgeny Mravinsky was a definite success. The concerto contains references to Beethoven and Elgar along with the plentiful use of a motif based on Shostakovich’s name: DSCH (the German note names for d, e flat, c, and b natural). Another of the premieres of works written on commission for the Czech Philharmonic will feature the music of Jiří Teml, a popular and remarkably versatile composer and a Prague Spring laureate. His compositional style reflects the influence of Czech folk music.

Historical connections can sometimes be entertaining. In the scholarly literature, one reads that Beethoven's Fifth Piano Concerto was dedicated to a Habsburg named Rudolf. This building, the Rudolfinum, was also named for Rudolf. But make no mistake, one Rudolf is not to be confused with the other. Beethoven's friend was Archduke Rudolf, to whom he also dedicated his great Archduke Trio, Op. 97, while "our" Rudolf was the crown prince seventy years later. Beethoven had given the premieres of all of his piano concertos, but by the time of the Emperor Concerto, he almost could not hear at all, unfortunately, so the part was entrusted to Friedrich Schneider in Leipzig and to Carl Czerny in Vienna. The composition is a culmination of the classical-era instrumental concerto while also throwing the door wide open to Romanticism.

Mahler’s Fourth Symphony concludes a tetralogy through which songs from the cycle The Youth's Magic Horn run like a common thread. The preceding symphonies work with material from several of the songs, while the Fourth Symphony quotes only one, Das himmlische Leben (Heavenly Life). There are flashes of the song in various forms throughout the symphony, then it finally appears as a whole in the fourth movement. The title Das himmlische Leben comes directly from Mahler, and it captures a child’s idea of heaven. He had originally wanted to use the song in his Third Symphony, which contains quotes of it. Ultimately, however, he made Das himmlische Leben the focal point of his Fourth Symphony, with its breath of heavenly beauty, child-like purity, and deep peace.
The series of four concerts by the Czech Philharmonic Chamber Orchestra premiered last season. This project was a success with its variable ensemble consisting exclusively of members of the Czech Philharmonic, and we are again using the same model this season. All of the Czech Philharmonic concertmasters participate as artistic supervisors, rehearsing and leading the orchestra for three of the concerts. A fourth concert, actually the second of the series taking place during the Christmas season, will be prepared by Jaroslav Krček, who shall lead the premiere of his composition dedicated to four women of the Czech Philharmonic. The concert programmes will be of enormous interest: a symbiosis of Vivaldi and Piazzolla, masterpieces by Janáček, Rejcha, and Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, and finally music of the Baroque composers Geminiani and Bach combined with Stravinsky. The soloists will also be youthful: the cellist Sebastian Bru and the pianist Zoltán Fejervári.

Vivaldi’s Four Seasons is heard every evening in dozens of cities all around the world in all kinds of venues and performances, often as a tourist attraction. The cost of its fame is that the quality of these performances varies, usually tending to be poor. To begin Series K, we have decided to present Vivaldi’s cycle in all its glory played by Josef Špaček and his colleagues from the Czech Philharmonic. The revolutionary work, often regarded as the first programmatic composition, evokes singing birds, buzzing flies, a fire in the winter and a frozen landscape, a barking dog, a summer storm, and even dancers emboldened by wine. Vivaldi connected a stirring display of virtuosity and bounty of musical ideas with sonnets illustrating the mood of each of the four concertos.

Astor Piazzolla, the king of the Argentine tango, set his four seasons in Buenos Aires, and he did not originally conceive them as a cycle. He wrote all four tangos for violin, piano, electric guitar, and bandoneon. The Spanish title Cuatro Estaciones Porteñas refers to the inhabitants of Buenos Aires.

The word “porteño” means an inhabitant of a port city in general, and this is automatically understood in Argentina to mean a person from Buenos Aires. At Gidon Kremer’s request, the successful Ukrainian composer Leonid Desyatnikov arranged the work for solo violin and string orchestra, and he inserted quotes from Vivaldi into Piazzolla’s music, further strengthening the connection between the two works.

Christmas Concert in Honour of Jaroslav Krček

When the name Jaroslav Krček is mentioned, the first thing that comes to mind is the ensemble Musica Bohemica, which he founded forty-four years ago. On top of that, Jaroslav Krček is celebrating his eightieth birthday this year! Sometimes, someone is called a “Renaissance man” who is not truly deserving. In the case of Jaroslav Krček, the opposite is the case. “Renaissance man” hardly suffices to capture everything that has brought fulfilment to Jaroslav Krček’s rich life. He has been a conductor, a composer, a player of countless musical instruments, a singer, a music director, and even an instrument maker. Everyone who has been fortunate enough to come into contact with him has experienced a torrent of irresistibly vital energy, optimism, an unstoppable desire for musical perfection, and an inexhaustible wellspring of musical ideas. Whether involving himself with folk music, historical music, adapting original folk material, composing, conducting, or directing, Jaroslav Krček has always drawn people to himself as a popular and sought-after colleague. He has had many musical friendships with players of the Czech Philharmonic, so it is our honour and pleasure to celebrate he eightieth birthday together with him. And as is typical of him, rather than accepting a gift, he has instead given four women from our orchestra a brand new composition, which will be given its world premiere.

The third programme of Series K presents three works by young composers: Mendelssohn wrote his Octet when he was just sixteen years old, Janáček presented his Suite for Strings before enrolling at the Leipzig Conservatoire, and the Concerto for Violin and Cello by Antonín Rejcha is one of that composer’s early works. Both soloists are young as well – concertmaster of the Czech Philharmonic Jiří Vodička and the Austrian cellist Sebastian Bru, a member of the Vienna Philharmonic.

Upon its premiere, critics called Mendelssohn’s Octet “a miracle of nineteenth-century music”. Inspiration from Goethe’s Walpurgis Night, quotes from Handel’s Messiah, and the masterful use of polyphony are all permeated with youthful musical invention and brilliant compositional technique. Janáček originally gave the movements of his composition titles that had been in use for French dance suites: Prelude, Allemande, Sarabande, and Air, but he quickly abandoned them because his style as a composer was simply too original to fit in with labels from the old dance suite.

At the midpoint of the programme is a concerto by the world traveller and extraordinarily gifted composer, teacher, and theorist Antonín Rejcha (Anton Reicha). This successful professor at the Paris Conservatoire who had been a student together with Beethoven, had taken lessons from Haydn, and had also given instruction to such greats as Berlioz, Franck, Gounod, and Liszt, was made a Chevalier of the Légion d’honneur, and he became a member of France’s National Institute of Sciences and Arts.

To conclude Series K, we are introducing an extraordinary pianist who is poised at the beginning of an international career. Zoltán Fejérvári triumphed at the 2017 Montreal International Music Competition and won a stipend from the Borletti-Buitoni Trust. András Schiff invited him to join Building Bridges, a project for exceptional young pianists, and he has twice participated at the Marlboro Music Festival at the personal invitation of Mitsuko Uchida. Zoltán Fejérvári has appeared at New York’s Carnegie Hall, the Gasteig in Munich, the Lingotto Auditorium in Turin, the Library of Congress in Washington, and the National Library in Buenos Aires. For his recording of Liszt’s Malédiction for piano and string orchestra he won France’s prestigious Grand prix du Disque. His skilled partner will be another soloist, the artistic supervisor of the programme Jan Mráček, winner of the Fritz Kreisler International Competition in Vienna, bringing to a conclusion his series of appearances by three concertmasters of the Czech Philharmonic as part of Series K.

Together with music of the High Baroque by Johann Sebastian Bach and Francesco Geminiani, you will be hearing Stravinsky’s treatment of subject matter from the commedie dell’arte with music by Giovanni Battista Pergolesi. Stravinsky composed the neoclassical ballet Pulcinella for Sergei Diaghilev, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra commissioned him to create an orchestral suite from it, in which he discovered “a backward look, of course – the first of many love affairs in that direction – but it was a look in the mirror, too.” Above all, he had written a congenial, attractive work.
In accordance with tradition, the special concerts for the 124th season include two opening concerts, a programme for New Year’s Eve and New Year’s Day, plus a special project arising from the second run of the Czech Philharmonic Composition Competition. Three winning compositions by young finalists will be heard in November under the baton of Keith Lockhart, with the highlight being the work of the overall winner: Song of the Willow Branch by Jana Vöröšová. The opening concert offers excerpts from operas followed by Dmitri Shostakovich’s sombre Eighth Symphony. Purely Czech repertoire will be heard on the New Year’s programme, when Jakub Hrůša will conduct works by Dvořák, Suk, Smetana, and Janáček. Because of great successes during past seasons, this year for the first time we are giving three performances – twice on New Year’s Eve and one more on the evening of New Year’s Day.

Opening Concerts of the Season

The ceremonial opening of the season will begin in the spirit of opera, commemorating the great works of Bedřich Smetana and Pyotr Ilyich Tchaikovsky, but the focal point of the programme will be Shostakovich’s Eighth Symphony. For Dmitri Shostakovich, who was constantly criticised by the Soviet regime for a lack of optimism, the Second World War amounted to a certain kind of artistic refuge: “Then the war came, and sorrow became something usual. We were able to speak about it, to weep openly for those whom we had lost. People ceased to be afraid of tears. Before the war, there was perhaps not a single family that had not lost someone – a father, brother, or dear friend. Everyone had someone to weep for, but they had to do so quietly, under their blankets, where no one could see them. Everybody was afraid of everybody else, and we were oppressed and smothered by sorrow. I, too, was suffocating. I had to write about it. I had to write a Requiem for all those who had died, who had suffered. I had to describe the terrible machinery of extermination and protest against it. The Seventh Symphony and Eighth Symphony are my Requiem. I feel boundless sorrow for those who were killed by Hitler, but my sorrow is no less great for those killed at Stalin’s orders. I suffer for everyone who was tortured, shot, or starved to death. There had been millions of these victims before the war with Hitler even began. The war brought many new sorrows and new devastation, but at the same time I did not forget about the horrors of the pre-war years. That is what my symphonies are about, including the Eighth.”

When Jiří Bělohlávek became the chief conductor of the Czech Philharmonic in 2012, one of his artistic goals was to create dignified conditions for young artists, to stimulate their professional development, and to contribute towards their success internationally. Besides working with young musicians in the orchestra and supporting talented soloists, maestro Bělohlávek and the composer
Miroslav Srnka were attempting to come up with an effective way to support young composers. Thanks to this, the first Czech Philharmonic Composition Competition took place in 2014, and another followed four years later. The first round drew a respectable 57 applicants from the Czech Republic and Slovakia. From among them, a committee consisting of players of the Czech Philharmonic, concert programming experts, and renowned composers selected the three finalists. The Czech Philharmonic commissioned Adrián Demoč, Matouš

Leoš Janáček
Sinfonietta

Music of the Castle Guard and the Police of the Czech Republic
Jakub Hrůša conductor

This year, we have decided to welcome in the new year with you in Czech style with four beautiful works, each of which is original and a supreme musical celebration. Antonín Dvořák, who conducted the very first Czech Philharmonic concert, composed three concert overtures titled In Nature’s Realm, Carnival, and Othello in 1891. Carnival Overture is the most impressive of these works, and it is part of the worldwide core orchestral repertoire. It has a brilliant violin solo in common with Suk's Praga, which follows. The second half opens with another depiction of Carnival, this time by Bedřich Smetana.

Suk dedicated his symphonic poem Praga to the “Royal City of Prague”, while Janáček dedicated his Sinfonietta to Brno. Although the two works share dedications to the two largest Czech cities, they differ entirely in terms of their character and overall tone. Suk's monumental symphonic poem builds upon the traditions of Smetana and Dvořák. It takes a look back at Prague's history, and through a recollection of a lyrical theme from his suite A Fairy Tale, it drives towards a tremendous hymn-like conclusion supported by the sound of organ and bells.

Janáček's immediate stimulus for composing the Sinfonietta was a request from the newspaper Lidové noviny that he write a greeting for the All-Sokol Rally. This resulted in the creation of the opening and closing fanfares, which later grew into a brilliant five-movement composition filled with mysticism, excitement, and grandeur. The Czech Philharmonic gave the premiere with Václav Talich in June 1926 as part of the cultural programme of the VIIIth All Sokol Rally at the Rudolfinum.

Prague Spring, Concluding Concerts of the Festival

The festival will announce the programme and performers in November.
During its 124th season, the orchestra will be presenting itself in concerts outside of Prague a total of thirty times. Immediately after its opening concerts, the Czech Philharmonic will make its first appearance in five years at the prestigious BBC Proms in London's Royal Albert Hall. The programme will be the same as for the opening concerts in Prague, with the chief conductor Semyon Bychkov and the soprano Elena Stikhina, and it will be broadcast on BBC Radio 3.

In October, the orchestra will return to Japan and Taiwan after a two-year absence. With Semyon Bychkov, it will first appear at the National Concert Hall in Taipei, then there will be eight concerts in Japan, two of which will be at one of the world’s most famous halls, Tokyo’s Suntory Hall, and one will be in the NHK Hall – that concert will be broadcast on Japan’s NHK state television network. The programmes will feature the music of Pyotr Ilyich Tchaikovsky and Smetana’s Má vlast (My Homeland) along with appearances by the concertmaster of the Berlin Philharmonic, Daishin Kashimoto.

Soon thereafter, the Czech Philharmonic will have two prestigious residencies with Semyon Bychkov – the first at the Musikverein in Vienna and the second at the modern Philharmonie de Paris, where the orchestra will be playing for the very first time with three performances. At both halls, the programme will be repeated from the September concerts at the Dvořák Prague Festival and will consist entirely of works by Tchaikovsky. The Czech Philharmonic will be appearing on tour with the cellist Gautier Capuçon, the violinist Renaud Capuçon, and the pianist Kirill Gerstein.

In March, the orchestra is heading for five important German cities – Frankfurt am Main, Cologne, Stuttgart, Friedrichshafen, and Freiburg – with the conductor Jakub Hrůša and the cellist Sol Gabetta. The programme will feature exclusively Czech music – Dvořák, Suk, and Janáček. Then in April, again with Jakub Hrůša, there is a residency with two concerts at the famed Elbphilharmonie in Hamburg – first a concert with the cellist Daniel Müller-Schott, then a concert performance of Janáček’s opera Káťa Kabanová with leading Czech and Slovak soloists.

In May, the Czech Philharmonic and Semyon Bychkov with the soprano Chen Reiss will be bringing symphonies by Gustav Mahler and Ludwig van Beethoven as well as Czech music on tour to Moscow and to Nanjing, China. The Czech Philharmonic is making its first visit to Moscow in nine years, and it will be playing two concerts in the brand new, modern Zaryadye Concert Hall in the city’s historical centre. In Nanjing, one of China’s most culturally and historically important cities, the Czech Philharmonic will play three orchestral concerts as well as chamber music and educational programmes. Its residency in China is being organised as part of the “Spring of Jiangnan” festival at what is currently the largest culture centre in all of Asia – the Jiangsu Grand Theatre, with which the Czech Philharmonic will be entering into cooperation over a period of several years.

In accordance with tradition, at the end of the season the orchestra will appear twice with Semyon Bychkov at the biggest Czech music festival outside of Prague, Smetana’s Litomyšl.

Broadcasts and Recordings

Like in past years, again during the 2019/2020 season, the Czech Philharmonic has much to look forward to in the field of recording projects. During the past season, the Czech Philharmonic saw the completion of installation of a new audiovisual recording studio at the Dvořák Hall in the Rudolfinum. This complex with the most up-to-date audiovisual recording technology, which is now gradually being put into operation, will enable the Czech Philharmonic to make the best possible recordings and live broadcasts of its educational projects and concerts. The new studio will be yet another important tool allowing the Czech Philharmonic to bring its activities to audiences at home and abroad.

During its 124th season, the Czech Philharmonic will continue its collaboration with the Decca recording label. This will primarily involve the issuing of the long-awaited complete set of Tchaikovsky’s symphonic works and piano concertos with the chief conductor Semyon Bychkov and the soloist Kirill Gerstein. The recording of the cycle of Mahler symphonies will continue with Symphony No. 4, and a recording will also be made of Double Concerto in A Minor for violin, cello, and orchestra with the soloists Lisa Batiashvili and Gautier Capuçon. The Decca label will also release the last studio recording by the late chief conductor Jiří Bělohlávek – Dvořák’s Biblical Songs sung by the Czech bass Jan Martiník. A recording will be added to the complete series with Dvořák’s Requiem and Te Deum performed by leading Czech and foreign soloists and the Prague Philharmonic Choir under the baton of the orchestra’s principal guest conductor Jakub Hrůša.

There will also be recordings during tours – the Czech Philharmonic will be collaborating with the channel BBC Radio 3 at the BBC Proms in London and with Japan’s NHK public television network in Tokyo.

Czech Television and Czech Radio continue their traditional partnerships with the Czech Philharmonic, selecting concerts in Prague for live broadcasting and taping.

In cooperation with the Czech TV, the Czech Philharmonic co-produced a documentary on Jiří Bělohlávek, subtitled “But I just love conducting so much”. The documentary will be premiered in September 2019, as part of the Golden Prague International Television Festival, with subsequent limited theatrical release.
In the world we live in, is there more music or noise? And are we surrounded more by harmony or by shouting? These are rhetorical questions, of course… The answers are obvious, unfortunately, and this should be no surprise. Noise and shouting are signs of the times when everyone is trying to attract everyone else’s attention, no matter what the cost. The choice of resources is based on whatever is flashier, noisier, or surprising in any way at all. This, in turn, has made us all a bit burned out, jaded, and tired.

However, there still is a source of living water, our hope for salvation: music. It’s just that the situation is getting harder and harder for us. After all, the crucial condition for music’s existence is that it be listened to. This is not necessarily meant in some lofty, metaphorical sense. We often find ourselves lacking the time to concentrate enough to listen to music in even the most ordinary way. We need time to do nothing else besides just listening to music. And perhaps thinking about it and also thinking a bit about ourselves, at that.

This is the direction in which we wish to be headed for yet another year of the Czech Philharmonic’s music education activities. Several innovations await us. “Cinkylinky jeřabinky” is the first of a series of workshops titled “Carnival and More” (Fašánek) for school pupils in their first or second years; the authors and instructors Monika Václová and Kateřina Klementová have taken inspiration from traditional folk rhymes, songs, and dances. The series of workshops titled “Be Wary! Be Grateful!” seems to be something completely different at first glance. It is devoted to the connections between music, freedom, and democratic values, but another of its goals is to use music to touch on things of importance within and around us. The same can also be said about the new fairytale concert “Midnight at the Rudolfinum” by Klára Boudalová which reminds us that there are important moments that we absolutely should not sleep through…

We are overjoyed that many traditional, proven programmes continue, but their creators and instructors are still working hard to improve and perfect them. This includes the “Little Rudolfinum” workshops by Veronika Lucassen and her co-workers and the concerts titled “Penguins at the Rudolfinum” and “Who’s Afraid of the Philharmonic?” which Alice Nellis has created for the first time visitors to the Rudolfinum. Then there is the popular series “Czech Philharmonic – The Serial”, for which a brand new programme has been prepared with a whole series of thematic workshops. We keep on educating teachers, we work with pupils at Elementary Art Schools, and for a seventh year straight we are happy to join Ida Kelarová and Čhavorenge on a shared path of Romani and Czechs (Hej Romale!, Romano drom).

We are doing all of this with the firm belief that music tears down barriers and builds bridges. That is because music is the language of the heart, to which we all wish to listen in the end. It is a language by which we can understand others and be freely creative with them.

Dvořák Hall

Using a time machine, on this occasion we will take several time jumps, and we will find out what kind of music the walls of the Rudolfinum prefer to listen to. In our time travels, we will be encountering a number of great composers, and with them we will even be able to discover the mystery of the Spirit of Music itself. The climax of this exciting game for the whole family will be a concert. A reward is guaranteed for everyone who plays!

The game On the Trail of the Spirit of Music will take place on the day of the concert, i.e. 07 June 2020, and it is intended for teams of 2–5 members. Each team will have at least one adult (who is responsible for the children during the game). Participants must have a valid ticket to the concert of the Orchestral Academy of the Czech Philharmonic on the same day. The game will take place in the area near the Rudolfinum. The number of participants is limited. Registration of participants will begin at 11:30 a.m. in the foyer of the Rudolfinum. The game will last ca. 1 hour. This special musical performance brings together different generations, different musical approaches, and different instruments bringing music to life. The music is created by a group effort on the spot, and it can never be repeated. What role does music play in finding a shared language? And through rhythm, harmony, and melody, can music lead us to understand each other better or to a happier life?

Taking part in the performance are participants in the project Through Music to Ourselves, which is taking place at certain schools and in families. The programme is led by the teacher, musician, and author of the concept Ondřej Tichý, who says: “We often teach children what something looks like, how something is pronounced or spelled, or how a note is played. But then there is very little time left for passing on to children the ability to overcome obstacles, to be satisfied with themselves, to establish contact with another person, or to hold on to joyful feelings. Although words sometimes are not enough, there remains only one possibility: a personal example here and now.” Through Music to Ourselves is a music education concept that opens up music to various generations and familiarises participants with the principles of playing an instrument, the use of the voice, elementary composing, and improvisation through practical playing. It encompasses individual instruction, encounters in families, programmes at schools, auxiliary programmes for children and adults, musical workshops, and performances. “I am deeply convinced”, says Ondřej Tichý, “that music opens up completely different possibilities for us and can be a special help in the family, education, and the lives of each of us.”

Because of their tailcoats, orchestra musicians somewhat resemble penguins, especially when seen through the eyes of children. For the seventh time, the actor Pavel Liška will be examining the world of orchestral musicians and their music. And naturally, there will be a curious and enthusiastic audience of children.

Together, they have already discovered what different kinds of music sound like, what a conductor is needed for, and why one does not talk at concerts. But they have also been able to experience what it is like to conduct an orchestra, to sing “Let’s Rejoice and Be Merry” from The Bartered Bride accompanied by an orchestra, to create the newest music together with the musicians of the Philharmonic, or to witness a performance by a blind pianist. We want to prepare experiences for children that will allow them to look for music not only on stage (or on their phones), but especially within themselves. You are invited to the premiere of an entertaining and educational programme by Alice Nellis for parents with children!

The light that has just been born is still too small and vulnerable, and someone could easily steal him from the world. Together, can we protect the light of Christmas until the heavenly clock strikes twelve? This fairy tale is about, among other things, how we should not sleep through important moments.

The great composers create music that allows us to look into our souls – into that mysterious place where people's lives are projected and from which they are directed at the same time – their thoughts, feelings, decisions, and struggles. In this series of our concerts, we are attempting to take a close look at the spirit and ideas of the composers Leoš Janáček, Ludwig van Beethoven, Miloslav Kabeláč, Antonín Dvořák, and Pyotr Ilyich Tchaikovsky. We will be listening to their powerful music, which also has a spiritual message for us.

Janáček's Jenůfa
(selections from the opera)
17 Oct. 2019  Thursday  7:30 p.m.  Dvořák Hall

“My servant recalls that during her second year with us, I began composing Jenůfa. That was in 1896. In those days, I was only a part-time composer! Being a church choir director and organist, a music teacher at an Austro-Hungarian normal school, the director of an organ school, a conductor of concerts at the Symphonic Society – having a terminally ill daughter at home – that was my life. Well, composing was hard, so I didn’t do much of it. For that reason, it is also hard for me to reminisce about it.” (Leoš Janáček, 1917) – “My husband had just finished Jenůfa. The whole time he was working on the opera, Olga was terribly interested in it. Now she asked: “Daddy, play Jenůfa for me; I’ll never hear it again.” Leoš sat down at the piano and played… I couldn’t bear it, so I ran away...” (Zdenka Janáčková)
Beethoven’s and Kabeláč’s Mystery of Time

26 Nov. 2019 __ Tuesday __ 7:30 p.m.
Dvořák Hall

Beethoven was a man of his times, but he wrote timeless musical works. One of them is Egmont Overture, which concerns freedom and the courage to risk confronting the powerful. Lamoraal, Count of Egmont, lived in the sixteenth century and became a symbol of the Dutch revolt against Spanish domination and the Inquisition. In 1956, Beethoven’s Egmont became the unofficial anthem of the Hungarian uprising against Soviet hegemony. — “Alongside Bohuslav Martinů and Karel Husa, Miloslav Kabeláč was the most important modern Czech composer. During the war, he refused to divorce his Jewish wife, so he was forced to leave his job in radio broadcasting, and he spent the rest of the war in hiding to avoid being sent to a concentration camp. After the war, he went back to work in radio, but he did not join the Communist Party. He was a musical programming director and a composer. His composition The Mystery of Time is in perfect opposition to the regime — the communists felt that they had time under control. And Kabeláč makes it clear that there is still some sort of cosmic time that is indifferent to whether some plodding regime exists or not.”
(The composer Milan Slavický, 2004)

Dvořák’s Stabat Mater

12 March 2020 __ Thursday __ 7:30 p.m.
Dvořák Hall

“I had been yearning to perform Dvořák’s Stabat Mater for a very long time. After more than thirty years, I wanted to engage in polemics with the conductor Karel Kovařovic, whose wonderful performance back then provoked in me an effort to stand one day on the podium and come to terms with that ten-movement song about suffering and loss, beginning with heavy, implacable sorrow and moving down a long, black corridor towards the light of paradise and a trusting Amen. (…) At Christmas I came into possession of Škréta’s painting of the Crucifixion… Unlike other depictions of a ‘general assembly’ beneath the Cross of Christ, Škréta limits himself to the gently inclined heads of the Sacrificial Victim and of the Mother of God, whose sad eyes gaze motionlessly, fixed on Christ’s face. The two of them are alone. The other figures in the picture are in the background and are only sketchily portrayed, as if to indicate how remote the world is from us when we encounter true sorrow. And it is in such loneliness that sorrow grows into an unbearable horror. I am glad that the honour of being the interpreter of this work by Dvořák has come to me so late: when I was young, I would not have been capable of it at all, and it was truly necessary to have life experience and to know human misery for me to be able to bow down before the Stabat Mater…”
(conductor Václav Talich, 1952)

Tchaikovsky’s Romeo and Juliet and Swan Lake

24 April 2020 __ Friday __ 7:30 p.m.
Dvořák Hall

“The sun was already setting when I had my tea and went for a walk… Deeply moved by the beauty of the forest, the setting sun, and the balmy evening, it occurred to me how such moments make it worthwhile to bear the little vexations with which life is filled… Such moments are enough for us to love life. We are promised the eternal joy of immortal existence, but we do not recognise or understand this. But if we are worthy of such moments and if they are truly eternal, we soon learn to enjoy them. Then one wishes to go on living, so there might be a repeat of moments like what I experienced yesterday. (…) Formerly, music was composed, created; now it is conceived, invented. This purely intellectual process of musical creation is reflected in how contemporary music is clever, piquant, curious, even delightful (…), but at the same time, it is cold, lacking the warmth of inspiration.”

My Uncle Vanished. Where Did He Go, Mr. President?

“For our pupils, this was one of the first steps in the topic of Czech post-war history. The step was not easy, just like the period when Josef Toufar was living. They appreciated the depth of the story, but they had a hard time dealing with the cruelty of Father Toufar’s fate. One girl asked a very telling question: ‘what was it that he had actually done wrong?’ (…) Maybe the way today’s young people take freedom and rule of law as a matter of course will be a guarantee that they won’t let it be taken from them.”

With members and teachers from the Orchestral Academy of the Czech Philharmonic and with actors from the Disman Radio Children’s Ensemble, we will be transported by a dramatic reading and by the music of Slavomír Hořínka into the story of the priest Josef Toufar, who was tortured to death by State Security officers in January 1950. The script is based on books by Miloš Doležal titled As If We Should Die Today and A Step into the Dark Night. The programme is accompanied by projections of period photographs. After the dramatic reading, there will be a meeting and discussion with Miloš Doležal, the author and biographer of Josef Toufar, and with Tomáš Petráček, a historian, and priest who is the postulator for Father Toufar’s beatification process.

Romano drom
2019

“The Czech Philharmonic’s involvement is a fine example of what can be done. Many orchestras have taken steps in the right direction – Simon Rattle took the Berlin Philharmonic to perform in some of the roughest parts of that city – but this one has a particular character and relevance. At a time of rampant nationalism in Eastern Europe, the outsider is always going to suffer. It is nothing new for Roma communities to have to accept that they are going to be denied respect and perhaps face direct discrimination. In that atmosphere the statement by the Czech Philharmonic is brave and significant.”

James Naughtie, BBC Music Magazine

The cooperation between the Czech Philharmonic, Ida Kelarová, and the Čhavorenge Children’s Choir will be continuing for a sixth year, supporting talented Romani children and youth in more than just their musical paths. The project has resulted in fifty concerts in the Czech Republic and Slovakia, including an appearance at the Czech Philharmonic Open Air on Hradčany Square under the baton of Jiří Bělohlávek, numerous workshops, and above all, the influence over the lives of dozens of Romani children and young people.

After two summer visits to eastern Slovakia in 2014 and 2015, Romano drom moved to the Šluknov, Nový Bor, and Děčín regions in August 2016, then it came to the Vsetín region in the summer of 2017. Čhavorenge then recorded a CD in cooperation with the Czech Philharmonic under the direction of Marko Ivanović, and it was issued by Supraphon in the spring of 2018. The 2018 Romano drom summer programme was held in Romania, where the children and the musicians of the Czech Philharmonic got to know the local community and its culture. There was a concert in the town Sinaia at the George Enescu International Music Festival for Young Musicians. In January 2019, we introduced the project Romano drom at concerts and workshops in Belfast, Northern Ireland, where the children of Čhavorenge and musicians of the Czech Philharmonic were invited by the Association of British Orchestras.

“Romani children lack the feeling that they are welcome in society. Their escape route from the vicious circle of settlements and ghettos to a world where something is expected of them, where they can believe in themselves and achieve something is one of the hardest journeys. Although the energy that we are investing in these children does not pay off immediately, I believe that there is hope for change. The Čhavorenge Children’s Choir is a way of motivating children, so they won’t give up their dreams and goals and will pursue a fulfilling life. I’m glad the Czech Philharmonic is going down the thorny path of education with us for a sixth year, but I realize that the journey toward understanding may take several more generations; in fact, it never ends.”

INTRODUCING

Dynamic Club

We greatly appreciate all of the contributions we receive from private donors. We know that the tradition of private philanthropy in the Czech Republic is very young and is basically still rising from the ashes, while it is flourishing to the west of us and is an integral component of support for cultural organisations there. We value all the more the ever growing number of our supporters who wish to be bound to the Czech Philharmonic by more than just the role of listeners or subscribers. You can join our Dynamic Club for just CZK 1,500 a year and belong to the group Piano. Our intention is for this affordable sum to highlight the perception of the Czech Philharmonic as the leading Czech orchestra, a value that will resonate with everyone regardless of wealth or social status. For larger gifts, we have the categories Mezzo-forte, Forte, and Fortissimo.

In this way we accumulate funding not only for the orchestra’s routine operations with its foreign guest conductors and soloists, but also for targeted projects – young players in the Orchestral Academy, support for particular players in the orchestra, new state-of-the-art audiovisual recordings at the Rudolfinum, tours, commissions of new works, and last but not least, our wealth of educational programmes. The breadth of the activities of the Czech Philharmonic is enormous, and we are able to accommodate donors who wish to target one of those activities preferentially.

We like meeting in person with others who are interested in joining the Dynamic Club. You can find a basic overview of the structure and activities of the Dynamic Club in the section Supporters – Dynamic Club on the Czech Philharmonic website.

You can express your interest in membership by sending an e-mail to klub@ceskafilharmonie.cz or by calling +420 606 616 531. Your contact person is Lucie Maňourová.

On behalf of the Czech Philharmonic, we wish to offer you our sincere thanks for your support and favour.

“Some years back, the subscription series of the Czech Philharmonic became the centrepiece of our culture season, so we are pleased by the existence of the Dynamic Club, which enabled us to make a financial donation to express our feeling of solidarity with this wonderful orchestra. The Dynamic Club has also arranged for us a series of enjoyable encounters with other club members and with people who are professionally associated with the orchestra. The club has also provided us with a number of special, unforgettable experiences. We had the opportunity of watching a rehearsal of Janáček’s Sinfonietta led by the chief conductor, maestro Bělohlávek, and a rehearsal of the New World Symphony under the baton of the new chief conductor, Semyon Bychkov. We were able to honour the memory of maestro Bělohlávek whilst listening to the Dvořák Stabat Mater conducted by Jakub Hrůša. This is a wonderful aspect of life in the club, which allows many people to join forces towards a shared goal. Few individuals are able to give the Czech Philharmonic an amount of money that would be substantially meaningful in itself for the orchestra’s operations. We believe that the Dynamic Club can be built into a strong community and that through this joining of societal forces, it will be a real support for the Czech Philharmonic.”

Partners of the Czech Philharmonic

The Czech Philharmonic is entering its 124th concert season with a “score” filled with a variety of plans. We are looking forward to engaging in successful collaboration together with our supporters. And in accordance with proper custom, again this year the “notes” written in our “score” include several attractive innovations, and we will soon be informing you about them.

Although we are firmly grounded in tradition, from which we draw when presenting Czech and foreign musical works on the prestigious stages of famed concert halls, we are simultaneously looking ahead and going along with the times. One proof of this is the promising development of our virtual concert hall project. We are also proud that composers from this country and abroad are creating new works specifically for the Czech Philharmonic. The Bohemian Heritage Fund is particularly deserving of thanks in this regard for its cooperation in supporting contemporary Czech music.

At the Czech Philharmonic – whether the orchestra on stage or the team in the background that secures administration, marketing, and strategic operations – we sincerely appreciate all those who have decided to support the arts and music in particular. Besides our founder, the Ministry of Culture of the Czech Republic, it is our partners and patrons who contribute substantially towards the growing awareness of the Czech Philharmonic as a high-quality ensemble with a position of importance in the context of Czech culture, but also towards the perception of the orchestra as a powerful, distinct brand, with which it is worthwhile to be connected.

We owe a debt of thanks to our general partner, the bank Česká spořitelna, and to our traditional partner, Škoda Auto. We also wish to thank our partners who support individual players: J&T Bank, the auction house Arthouse Hejtmaněk, and the watch retailer Hodinářství Bechyně. We have a deepening partnership with the Mucha Museum, which supports the Czech Chamber Music Society as well as the developing idea of the Chamber Orchestra of the Czech Philharmonic. We are realising creative projects with the companies FINEP and Arcona Capital Czech Republic. We are also pleased with the growth of our base of supporters in the Dynamic Club of the Czech Philharmonic. Thanks in part to their generosity and infectious enthusiasm, we are able to invite top soloists and conductors, to develop the artistry of young talents in the Orchestral Academy, or to support the worthy activities of the ensemble Chavorenge.

We are significantly indebted to our “Beautiful Sound Partners”, the companies PPF and J&T Bank, which enable the borrowing of rare string instruments for our musicians. Also entering its next phase is the educational project Music for Schools, which is successfully bringing together teachers at secondary and elementary schools at regional centres in cooperation with the Agrofert Foundation. These are teachers who view music education as an important part of the educating of future generations.

It is absolutely necessary for us to be heard and seen. We could achieve neither the requisite reach nor the necessary “reverberation” without the support of professionals: we appreciate our good relations and long-term cooperation with our general media partner Czech Television, Czech Radio, the media company MAFRA, and leading media partners in the field. Those subjects are also deserving of our sincere thanks.

Ladies and gentlemen, fans of the Czech Philharmonic, we hope all of you enjoy beautiful experiences during the 2019/2020 season. Let the music resound!

Management of the Czech Philharmonic

Dear fans of first-class music and of the Czech Philharmonic,

Each season the Czech Philharmonic offers unique cultural experiences and special events. We are enormously pleased that the bank Česká spořitelna can participate as a traditional partner.

Together with you, I am looking forward to hearing a wide variety of music and to the line-up of extraordinary performers. I am also pleased that we can support the Czech Philharmonic in its long-term efforts to present inventive programmes to bring the world of classical music even to the youngest listeners.

I hope that your every encounter with the Czech Philharmonic, whether at the historic Rudolfinum or elsewhere, will be an unforgettable and inspirational experience.
